David Lisnard mayor of Cannes provides high security against terrorism threat

And reassurance for the 69th Cannes Fest

Paris, Washington DC, 12.04.2016, 00:28 Time

USPA NEWS - The next 11 to 22 May, will take place the 69th edition of the Cannes festival. Yesterday at a press conference, David Lisnard (Mayor of Cannes) announced that to protect themselves against the terrorist threat, the city would implement precautionary measures. A High Security plan is in process.

It would be irresponsible not to consider the context, even if there is no specific threat to Cannes. "Yesterday at a press conference, the mayor of Cannes David Lisnard, made the point nearly four months early biggest film festival in the world.

"The idea is to limit risks and manage potential crisis" said the aedile who said that several devices of the future municipal level to prevent terrorism (CTAP) will be applied in the coming weeks. And, after an audit performed by a group of four international experts including a former head of the Israeli anti-terrorism. The CTAP was detailed yesterday at the press conference the mayor of Cannes. "The organization of a single command post, away from one secure location with communications can withstand cyber attacks was endorsed and an" early warning on possible intrusion by sea, "explained David Lisnard in comments reported by AFP and Europe

Full scale exercises with the population, to simulate terrorist attacks on several sites, should be organized before the next Cannes Film Festival. (...) The network of 492 video-camera-based protection the city will have new models, especially around schools. (...) This device meets the need to protect the population, but also aims to ensure the economic attractiveness of Cannes where many international events are held. "-----
